

IELTS: to understand or to learn?

English is undoubtedly needed. If to this fact we are taught in school, the more we understand the world, the more convinced of this.

If you start from afar: for this purpose there is a TOEFL and IELTS. Both exams determine the level of English proficiency. Hmm. It is better to say that the exams test how well you can use the language within those or other problems, and not just your knowledge. Results are recognized internationally, and the exam is official. IELTS in turn there are two types: General; immigration and Academic; for educational purposes (exchange programs, practicum, admission to universities abroad).

What you should know before the exam.

The test does not assess your language proficiency. It determines your skill level using it. In other words: to pass the test, it is necessary to have a full hand on the task; to know what their types in each part (listening, reading, writing, conversation) and not to ponder what is required of you. In this exam every second is important.

If you are looking for a good result, it will never be nothing so important as the expression goes "Practice makes perfect". On the test there is the active process of language use. In the first part, "Listening"; utilized listening skills, reading, writing. In the second Reading; such skills as skimming, scanning and locating information. It is perfected only with practice.

The importance of the location. All the information about the address and time will be sent the week before the exam. Come to the venue for the day, ask whether the exam is held at this address. On the test day, it is better to be 30 minutes before registration. Read everything that is written on the posters.

Do not drink a lot of water and coffee (!) before the test. If you leave the audience; wasting time. And it is weight in gold, actually. Out of the classroom is not recommended in General, and is prohibited when the instructions are read (before each part) between the part and 10 minutes to the end of each.

All data and answers filled in pencil. Part of writing can be filled as a pencil and pen. For a list of ideas on the draft there is almost no time, therefore, the letter is also better to write custom writing in the blank the answer with a pencil. Its like the rubber and the handle given in the exam.

Learning new vocabulary can be stopped a week before test. And best of all; 21 days. This time is spent on repetition and active use of studied. But before that you need to surround yourself with English, using all means. And the sooner we start doing, the better. After all, "Easy come & easy go". And correctly put the comma: to understand, not to learn.

The history of life. The Internet; is a limitless resource. Accordingly, examples of tests are also countless. But what would be the surprise when on the night before the exam random youtube decides to recommend a video with a speech scientist who develops the test tasks in Cambridge. And it is on examples that are difficult to see zalecanych sites says that the information there is presented not according to the principles of the IELTS. As examples of modified people who do not meet the real purpose of the test and can still be confusing.

Conclusion: to be used for training only need specially designed for this literature Cambridge.
